Adequate Compensation.

We find in the last issue of the Gazette an opinion expressed to the effect that if the public interest of this community is divided between two or more local new-papers it detracts from the merits of one by failing to furnish it adequate encouragement and remuneration; and then follows a great deal of idle talk as to the Gazette's comprehensiveness, progressiveness, appreciativeness, etc., in substantiation of its claim for "individual" support. The interpretation of all this seems to be—Stop taking The Record and take the Gazette. Well, we believe ourself there are too many papers; but really, we can't accommodate our neighbor, much as he is in want of more adequate remuneration.

We have bought several thousand dollars worth of type, presses, etc., and would like to use them a little while longer. By the way, the Gazette doesn't give its views as to what constitutes "adequate remuneration."

At the recent meeting of the Township Committee, however, its advertising rates were made public through a little account which was sent in for audit which throws a gleam of light on the subject. The bill was for advertising two or three notices in relation to the introduction of gas, into our town, and amounted to $20.00. If all the other-advertisers in the Gazette pay as liberally as its publisher expects the taxpayers of Bloomfield to do, there need be no question as to the adequate remuneration.

Taking the foregoing as the standard, its income from advertising would be about eight hundred dollars a column per year! With such a prodigious resource at hand, it seems needless cruelty that the Montclair Heald and the Bloomfield Record should be incontinently eaten by their voracious contemporary.

The Beecher Case.

Plymouth Church, Brooklyn has proved too much for the scandal-hunters as well as her sister churches who hold to a rigid system of discipline. While we await with some interest the development of the independent position taken by Mr. Beecher's church, we are glad to see the principle gaining ground that ecclesiastical bodies should not institute prurient searches into the family affairs of its members. Granting the existence of any trouble, however serious, or of whatever nature, between Mr. Beecher, Mr. Tilton and Mr. Bowen, if Plymouth Church deems it her duty not to revive a difference after it has been peacefully adjusted by the parties directly interested, certainly other churches and the public ought to be satisfied.

It were out of our province to discuss the moral aspects of this case, but we will quote a paragraph from a letter by Miss Swisshelm to the Chicago Tribune:

Whitefield was a great preacher, and did the world good service, although he was the apologist and ally of slaveholders and slave-traders. George Washington was a human man, although he did drag a poor, escaped slave woman back into bondage: "Child Harold" is a noble poem, although written by a rake; and Thomas Paine was a statesman, philosopher, and patriot, although he was infidel. The world would be proverby-striken to-day if deprived of the labors of all the men who would have failed to pass unscathed through a church investigation. So, even admitting the possibility of Mr. Beecher's so falling, I insist that, without fear of injury to the cause of morality, he may be permitted to work away until some regular ascension is brought against him. Any man's general reputation for decency should be answer enough to such a charge as that which lies against him; and I repeat that, when the Congregational Church takes Mrs. Woodhull for a leader, I must decline the honor of being one of the led. It is not possible that Mr. Beecher could so fall without coming very soon to a bitter repentance; and I would leave God and him to settle it. Especially as no concealed guilt can be so detrimental to public morals as is the mode of trying criminals before a jury of a hundred million people, a large part of whom take lessons of the culprit and make a hero of him.

In the Ulsterzook murder case the Court has refused to grant a new trial, and sentenced the murderer to death. The prisoner received the sentence with composure and made no statement.

England is making preparations to carry on the Ashante war with redoubled vigor. Four additional battalions of crack regiments are under orders for embarkation to the Gold coast. Sharp action is the motto, as in Abyssinia.

John M. Brush, an old telegraph operator from Texas, while recording his name on the hotel register of the Planter's House, Carbondale, Ill., spattered some ink which led to a quarrel with the clerk. The matter was taken up by the proprietor, J. W. McDonald, and resulted in his pushing Mr. Brush out of the door and then shooting him down like a dog.

Atlanta, Georgia, is to have a one-rail street railroad. There has just been completed at the machine shop of Lafferty & Bros., Gloucester City, N. J., a four-ton locomotive, resting on two wheels, one following the other, and designed for Atlanta's velocipede street cars. Mr. E. Crew, the inventor, claims that his engine and track are adapted to the propelling of canal boats.

Professor Louis Agassiz died at his home in Cambridge on Sunday evening. He had been ill for a number of days with a disease which paralyzed his body, but left his mental faculties unimpaired, and his death was therefore not unexpected. The death of Professor Agassiz creates a vacancy in the ranks of Christian science which cannot well be filled. He was an opponent to the Darwinian theory, and at the time of his death left unfinished work which he had planned for the coming winter combative to those scientists who give too wide a range and license to their theories. He was a native of Switzerland and came to this country in 1846, and at once became identified with the work of his profession. His time has been divided between teaching and making original investigations. He has conducted a number of government expeditions, of which the one sent out in the Hassler was the last.

LITERARY NOTICES.

The New York Independent has recently completed its twenty-fifth year. Its veteran publisher, Mr. H. C. Bowen, contributes a paper which forms a most interesting recital of this quarter of a century of its career. We felt a more than ordinary interest in reading it because we were an employee in the typographical department of the paper in its early days. The Independent like nearly every great and successful undertaking, began in a modest way, and its publisher thus happily relates the incident of its birth:

"Twenty-five years ago I stood, with others, beside a small printing press, in a dark cellar in this city, and saw the first copy of the Independent come forth, as timid as a babe or a bride, but amid cheers and rejoicing which have not been forgotten. Dr. Joseph P. Thompson, one of the half a dozen present, was a little ahead of the rest of us, and, reaching forth his hand at the proper moment, took the first sheet, and said, as near as I can recollect: 'Here, gentlemen, I present you a copy of the Independent, a paper which we now consecrate to God and humanity. May it live and grow, and its influence for good be felt all over the land and throughout the world.'"

The Independent started as a religious journal of the Congregational denomination. It boldly espoused the cause of human rights and freedom when few newspapers were found willing to venture opinions in antagonism to the question of American Slavery. Many will recall the unrelenting warfare it waged in its early days against the fugitive Slave Law.

Though it was eminently from the start a successful and a leading newspaper, it had its financial vicissitudes. At the end of its tenth year it was in debt $80,000. The five original stockholders one by one dropped out, and left the paper in the hands of its present owner, who has carried it safely through until it has now abundant means and the greatest stability of resource.

Sixteen years ago the Independent was printed and published at No. 22 Beckman st., N. Y., and we were then an apprentice in its composing room. It hardly seems more than a year or two ago, and the countenances of Dr. Leavitt, chief editor, and Theo. Tilton, assistant, are well remembered. The peculiarities in the chirography of Cheever, Thompson, Bacon, Storrs, Beecher, then editorial contributors, to the Independent, are as vivid as though it was but yesterday we set up the type from their manuscripts.

A day or two ago a Bloomfield gentleman said he had taken the Independent for fifteen years, and considers it invaluable as his family paper. He spoke of the excellency of its financial department as a marked feature, and upon which he placed great reliance.

St. Nicholas, Scribner's new illustrated magazine for girls and boys, begins the new year with a superb holiday number. Our Young Folks, hitherto published by Osgood & Co., has merged in St. Nicholas. We cannot speak too highly of this unique periodical. Mr. J. T. Trowbridge, editor of Our Young Folks, transfers his story "Fast Friends" to the columns of St. Nicholas, and it promises to be of great interest. We can't enumerate all the good things in the holiday number, but among them will be found a Christmas story called "Pete," who is a newsboy. Christmas articles by Donald G. Mitchell and John Hay, and choice poems by W. Cullen Bryant, Lucy Larcom and Mary Mapes Dodge. The illustrations are the best that have yet appeared.

President MacMahon has remitted the sentence of Marshal Bazaine to one of twenty years' seclusion on the island of Sainte Marguerite.

In the Ulsterzook murder case the Court has refused to grant a new trial, and sentenced the murderer to death. The prisoner received the sentence with composure and made no statement.

John C. Heenan died worth $160,000. This was made keeping a gambling house. He was put into the business by William M. Tweed in 1870. He had three partners, William Cridge, John J. Kelso, and Big Murray. The four often divided $20,000 a month profits between them. Mr. Kelso ceased to be a partner when he left the police. Oliver Charlick is now interfering with these unlawful kinds of business. It looks as if he would shut gambling hell of all kinds and keep them shut. If he does this the public will owe him a debt of gratitude.
